Home Project Home Hi, anonymous!

The goal of this project is to identify editors' intentions when revising texts. Your task is to review a single revision within a paragraph and label the intention behind it.

Pay attention to the following tips when annotating the revision:

Review the examples (below) and label definitions (click the "In

Project: Demo

Instructions

Review the examples (below) and label definitions (click the "Instructions" button).

- Read the whole text and consider the context. Revision intentions will be clearer if you know the full context. This includes the full paragraph and the other revisions.
 See the domain of the revision coming from, then locate from 4 domains: Collaborative Authoring, Information/Explanatory Writing, Journalistic/ Literary Writing and Source code. The table Application Domain below shows the definition, examples.
- If the revision matches multiple domains, such as the revisions from Wikihow can match to Collaborative Authoring and Informative/Explanatory Writing, you need to select a label from categories under Collaborative Authoring and Informative/Explanatory Writing. The table below shows the definition, explanation and examples for the categories under domains.
 If no category under that four domain matches to the revision, then you need to determine whether the revision alters the summary of text. If yes, selecting a category under meaning-changed. We only pick the next-level category of non-/meaning-changed category.
- category of non-/meaning-changed category.

 If not, selecting a category under non-meaning-changed.

 If you still cannot find a category matching to the revision, check the Other.

	intentions exist in one revision,		e additional labels in the following checkbox.
